Introduction

A seemingly patchwork blue-skinned being, mostly hidden under a black coat walks through the market with several cages

Appearance

Tall, muscular, long white hair and what seems to be a few extra appendages under their long black leather coat

Expressions

Each addition gets me closer to perfection

Why would anyone want to remain normal, when they can be so much more?

Mannerisms

has a slightly crazy look in their eyes, always looks like they're ready to pounce

Motivations

the pursuit of perfection

Passions

body modification

Background Story

Ulther Hapwath was originally a human but has spent most of their adult life experimaneting on and augmenting his own body in search of some distorted view of human perfection. A skilled spell slinger and hunter, they hunt and capture many specimens of various creatures to study and experiment on. They are a brilliant biologist with an exceptional knowledge of many different creatures anatomy and the steady hands of a surgeon. Recruited by Gerhardt Klippstein to join the Collegium for their vast biological knowledge, their employers are slightly less than keen on the reckless abandon with which they are willing to experiment on themselves. Since they joined the Collegium, they have been contacted by a mysterious benefactor from beyond the veil. Ulther has no idea who this benefactor is, but they have been helping to guild their self-evolution and in the creation of a substance called Cytoplast, a sort of ooze that helps with the bonding of upgrades and grants temporary healing when applied to a living creature. Ulther's benefactor is in fact, the disembodied spirit Momir Vig, disgraced and deceased former Guildmaster of the Simic Combine on the Plane of Ravnica. Somehow Momir has crossed into this world and is slowly using Ulther to create Cytoplast and use it to build him a new body.
