Married young, she was corralled into the traditional power positions of a Duergar. Mammoon sought power over everything else and would be ruthless in this pursuit. She sought the faith of her village surrounding region, and eventually the Underdark. Vying for a position as Loxxed Priestess, comparable to a magistrate, Mammoon watched as her competitor gained greater and greater favor. This favor grew until her competitor finally had a child. This Duergard tribe had a particularly hard time reproducing, and this was a sign from their God. Not only did she face ongoing abuse from her husband, but about her barren womb, Mammoon now faced imminent defeat in her pursuit of power. &lt;/p&gt;&lt;p&gt;As the almost Spartan culture would allow, Mammoon snatched the child from its bed and brought it to the center of Clax, ringing the town bell. Many of her tribe flooded the streets to watch Mammoon sacrifice the child in offering to Clax. The statue reached down, scooped up the body, and consumed it violently. Mammoon was then imbued with an overwhelming sense that she was destined for greater things. She denounced the tribe in an animal growl and fled the Underdark in search of greater sacrifices to Clax. Seeing such violence in sacrifice has become her primary goal.&lt;/p&gt;
