PERSONALITY

As a high priest of Waukeen [or any other Civilization or Mercantile/Capitalist Community] Morion believes in the power of venture capitalism, mercantile culture, and clear divisions of labor. He is a champion of this clergy and a warrior for its ideals.

He grew up in a High Elven community committed to the establishment of the ideals that insist that 'civilized' societies must rely on a clear division of labor; a clarity which can only be achieved by relying on the power of wealth as the primary feature for division.

To these clergy, the exchange of coin and goods is central to maintaining law and order and, as such, the church has dedicated champions to protecting marketplaces, caravans and any other vectors for the spread of capitalism. They have established powerful 'armies' of warriors and priests, adorned in lush tunics of grey and gold, highlighted with rare coins sewn into the fabric.

Morion has spent his many years dedicated to this clergy. Battling surrounding nations as a warrior-priest, He has gained notoriety for his ruthless and divinely imbued abilities. Even within the church hierarchy. These clergy literally battle one another for advancement to the upper echelons. And Morion has gained a reputation as a dangerous opponent among the dedicated members of the community.

The upper clergy consist primarily of Elves and Humans, while the lower echelons are made up of the dwarves, plus a large proportion of Warforged created by the gifted High Elf and Human devout.

Warion is not engaged in complex rituals and prayer to the Marketplace Eternal at the Mercantile Temple. He is most often found escorting high-value trade caravans through distant trade routes. He is often accompanied by a small battalion of warforged dedicated to the mercantile clergy. Morion is the favorite of one particular follower, <https://getvibrantgames.com/npc2/cure/>
