Introduction

"So you'd like to borrow some money?" Says the small, weasely, balding man behind the carved oak banker's desk

Appearance

Short, aged and scrawny with pointed weasely features. Fine bankers clothes, mostly bald with a wispy red comb-over

Expressions

"How is your credit?"; "I might be able to arrange something if you'd perhaps be willing to do a favor for my family"

Mannerisms

Adjusts his glasses, often sweaty even in colder temperatures.

Background Story

---

Basil Dumas is the oldest son of Anastasia and the money man of the family. He handles all of the banking and investments of the Dumas Family. He was taught by his father, who amassed the family fortune as a landlord and moneylender before his untimely death, the ways of the financial world. He is a brilliant financial mind and shrewd businessman, and uses that to the benefit of the family, often investing in businesses and organization in return for favors for the family. When he was a young man, he closed a business deal that evicted an elderly lady and her family. As a result, The lady cursed Basil with the curse of Lycanthropy. Over the years he has managed to gain mastery over the curse, banding it to his will and like all things in his life, to his advantage.
