He tucked Bodius in the group's steamer chest and gently fed her, gave her water, and tended to her wounds as he made his way to the nearest township. Upon re-opening the steamer, Bodius was somewhat recovered and attempted to get out.

"No. Elf lady safe", Scarback proclaimed as he knocked her out with a back hammer. He tied her up securely, stuffed cloth in her mouth, and closed the chest, determined to keep Bodius safe from harm. Yet, that same night when he made his way through town his mind encountered a serious psychological schism; he couldn't accept what he'd done immediately began searching for Bodius. At the same time he had an inexorable bond with his steamer trunk. Twice daily, in private, he checked on his belongings and often then recognize that Bodius remained in the chest. He will feed her and provide her water, only to Bind gag her and lock the steamer back up.

PERSONALITY

When the village of Everskin [Any Elven village] was raided by Ogres and goblinoids, the inevitable results of the plunder and pillage was that the ravaged female escapees would birth half-breed. Relima Haas, a young woman and former wife of a fine hunter who died in the raids, was among these poor women. The gestation period was more than draining and the birth fatal. Scarback was born.

Scavenging for food and other sustenance and forced to reform their beliefs and direction, the group of survivors raised Scarback in the wilderness. He learned to value the spirits of the wild beasts and flora. He also learned the value of connecting with the rage he felt over the abuses imparted upon his mother and her now scattered community of hunters.

A small portion of these survivors refused to live in survival-mode and instead departed together to seek a better life. Scarback followed. These departees were the smarter and more talented of the group. One of these departees was a beautiful young elven woman named Bodius towards whom Scarback took a serious liking.
