Traveling village to village, they would perform feats of strength and agility for coin or wrangle up food or drink. In time they came to be known as an entertaining side-show. On one fateful night, the group encountered a particularly vicious pack of gnolls. Scarback fought valiantly while most of the group were slain. The gnolls plundered what they could and fled while Scarback was left tending to a seriously wounded Bodius with tears in his eyes.

"Scarback love pretty elf-lady", he lamented.

He tucked Bodius in the group's steamer chest and gently fed her, gave her water, and tended to her wounds as he made his way to the nearest township. Upon next opening the steamer, Bodius was somewhat recovered and attempted to get out.

"No. Elf lady not safe", Scarback proclaimed as he knocked her out with a back blow. He tied her up securely, stuffed cloth in her mouth, and closed the chest, determined to keep Bodius safe from harm. Yet, that same day, when he made his way through town his mind encountered a serious psychological schism; he could not accept what he'd done and immediately began searching for Bodius. At the same time he felt an inexorable bond with his captive in the steamer trunk. Twice daily, in private, he will check on his captive's belongings and only then recognize that Bodius remains in the chest. He will feed her and provide her water, only to bind and gag her and lock the steamer back up.
