PERSONALITY

As a high priest of Waukeen [or any other Civilization or Mercantile/Capitalist Community] Morion believes in the power of venture capital, mercantile culture, and clear divisions of labor. He is a champion of this clergy and a warrior for it. He grew up in a High Elven community committed to the establishment of the ideals that insist that 'civilized' societies must rely on a clear division of labor; a clarity which can only be achieved by relying on the power of wealth as the primary feature for division.

To these clergy, the exchange of coin and goods is central to maintaining law and order and, as such, the church has dedicated its champions to protecting marketplaces, caravans, and any other vectors for the spread of capitalism. They have established powerful 'armies' of warriors and priests, adorned in lush tunics of grey and gold, highlighted with rare coins sewn into the fabric.

Morion has spent his many years dedicated to this clergy. Battling surrounding nations as a warrior priest, He has gained notoriety for his ruthless and divinely imbued abilities. Even within the hierarchy. These clergy literally battle one another for advancement to the upper echelons. And Morion has gained a reputation as a dangerous opponent.

A dedicated member of the community.

The upper clergy consist primarily of Elves and Humans, while the lower echelons are made up of the Warforged, plus a large proportion of Warforged created by the gifted High Elf and Human devout.

Vorion is not engaged in complex rituals and prayers. He is found at Marketplace Eternal at the Mercantile Temple, where he is most often found escorting high-value trade caravans through distant trade routes. He is accompanied by a small battalion of warforged dedicated to the mercantile clergy. Morion is fond of one particular follower, <https://getvibrantgames.com/npc2/cure>
