ROLEPLAYING

Introduction

The chaos of the bustling tavern is contrasted by the composed keep behind the bar. She pushes a tankard towards you.

Appearance

A beautiful but clearly weathered half-elf with noticeable battle scars. Sleek blond mylar hair. Deep brown eyes.

Expressions

"The wild ain't so wild; depending on who you are"; "The traditions of the trees tell us where we mortals truly belong"

Mannerisms

Calm and composed in movement. Light but commanding nods and gestures. Drums fingers on the bar with calm impatience.

Motivations

Katerina has resigned herself to a common life of tradition. Desires reigning in expanding technologies & magic.

Passions

Nature. Trees. Any usable product of nature as revered.

BACKGROUND STORY

The great battles of the Duplicity [any significant historical war] witnessed the warring of races over the sovereignty of nations. While the elves and humans were on tenuous grounds with regard to alliances and the mixing of races largely frowned upon, the increasing lack of militia led to ranked officers looking the other way when enlisting half-breeds. Sylvan elves, each tribe aligned with different unique aspects of their natural environment, drew from various natural forces. Katerina's tribe allied with Treants and their ilk. Raised by Druids of the circle of Selune [or a similar moon God/dess], her tribe stood fanatically against the forces sweeping across the wildlands.

Katerina enlisted in the army allied humans and elves and fought valiantly in the long war. When various treaties were eventually reached and a modicum of peace blanketed the region, her people were less isolated and had folded themselves into the broader cultures of the region. Her experiences in the war still resonated and her distaste for the races lingered. Still he traumatized, her psyche remained conflicted between the tradition deeply embedded into her being and the desire to achieve her own imagined goals of establishing a Sylvan Kingdom that celebrates trees and creations of nature, while abandoning the tinkering with technologies and dark magicks.
