BACKGROUND STORY
&lt;p&gt; Hilltop [Village; Town] is a quiet halfling town located on a well-used trade route. This has conditioned th population to become diverse in the skillsets and relatively wealthy over compared to other halfling settleme With all the coming and going of people and voluminous exchange o coins, goods, and services, people c get lost. When people get lost and nobody comes looking for you, well, then what do you do? A lecherous a ornery halfling grain and feed merchant from the nearby economi centre of Invasaad [Major City] was traveling through Hilltop with his "b employees", his three young daughters. The girls would heave th sacks of grain and feed on and off t cart or sometimes would be responsible for interacting with immediate buyers. In one transacti the feed had been hauled onto the buyer's cart whilst Stella - the youn of the 3 sisters - was bargaining for first time with a crotchety old woma who couldn't afford to feed her goat &lt;/p&gt;&lt;p&gt;"I'll give ya two silver, not more! My husband has passed and 'ad no children. I'm left to me own devices! 'Ave pity on an old lady". &lt;/p&gt;&lt;p&gt;Remembering how her fat would deal abusively with her sister whenever they returned with less th he expected, Stella continued to bargain. In the meanwhile, her fath who had grown tired of feeding a th child and who had resigned himself cutting down the weakest buffalo, h carried on in the cart out of town. Stella continued to barter, none the wiser, until the argumentative customer wouldn't budge. She look back for her father's approval and s no cart, no father, no sisters. Stella ended the barter, panicked. She rac around town thinking that her fathe had other dealings. He was nowhere to be found. Young Stella wept in the square.&lt;/p&gt;&lt;p&gt;Eventually that evening a kind elderly halfling wom approached the weeping figure. She comforted her. Told her their were bigger problems.
