Special Abilities

- There are some downsides to having amnesia. When Noel finds out about their past, if events go against their current alignment, Noel would make wisdom saving throw (DC 10). If they fail, they take 1d4 psychic damage and that damage is removed from the max HP. | N/A | N/A | N/A | No starts as a Ranger. When the DM reveals more information about Noel's past through the story, Noel is able to reflect those changes on their character sheet: Meaning that if in Noel's past, the DM reveals they were a thief, Noel could obtain proficiency in thief's tools, or even multiclass as a rogue. This special ability can happen at anytime and is not related to experience, but is up to the DM.

Special Equipment

BACKGROUND STORY

Noel was not always a warforged. They remember the grass upon their feet and the taste of meat but nothing else, not even their name. The name Noel comes from an old manufacturing plate located on the body they worked in: Number 31 (No.31). The body was long ago discarded. Noel awoke in a mass grave of warforged with only a name in their head. They are not sure if the name is theirs or if it is someone they once knew. They have been searching for answers to no avail. They have been kicked out of towns and shunned from inns for the way they look. They have only ever found sanctuaries, temples and alone in the woods. They have resorted to requesting local clerics to ask around about the faceless name for any answers. | The true backstory of this character is up to the DM. How this character somehow connected to your party or the BBEG? | were they in a romantic partnership with a necromancer or Lich and when they died, the partner did everything they could to bring them back? Were they a warlock that made a deal with their patron? After they died, the patron put their soul into a machine for them to continue to serve? Are those memories actually their own, or are they being manipulated? | There are many possibilities, that I would feel right cementing only one background for this character. Adjust as needed for your own campaign.
