Might as well be a monkey following the filthy jungle people you hold so dear."The mage uttered some mystical incantations in Drow and traced sigils in the air, transforming Wesley into a Orangutan. The invaders then proceeded to ignite the shelves books in the library before fleeing through a teleportation portal. The local guard attended the blaze and brought it under control but Wesley had already pulled himself from the blaze. Ashamed to ever show himself to anyone in his home town, he slowly retreated into the jungle. For days, Wesley sought out the Sylvan Elven Druids he knew inhabited the surrounding jungles. Eventually found by the kind souls, Wesley was no longer able to communicate besides pointing to himself and shouting 'Ook!'. When the Druids found him reading through their tomes during his recovery, they recognized that this 'monkey' was beyond ordinary. They chose to transport him to the High Elven City of Emnus [A Major Elven City] to study. The Elves of Emnus were able to determine that Ook was a victim of magic but the polymorph spell was of unknown origin to them and they weren't able to trace the magic to uncover his original form. They quickly came to see Ook's ability to categorize and organize tons of knowledge and appointed him as assistant to their keeper of archives and knowledge. Ook has since become renown throughout the surrounding regions.
